"YOU'RE NEVER READY."

Last winter, frilled with silvery fur, I vowed that she was daintiest, neatest; But, ah, what matters dress to her? She's always sweetest.

Yet, no! I'd have her robed in white, In garden hat and belted jacket; And certainly her fingers light Should hold a racquet. She leaves me here to yawn and stretch And pace the walk in turns unsteady; Then comes, exclaiming, "Lazy Wretch! You're never ready!"

She mocks my play with lip and eye— Oh, soon enow she makes me suffer! Yet well she knows the reason why I am such a duffer.

It is not that my skill is small,
But hopeless odds her rival plays at;
For who on earth could watch a ball
With her to gaze at!

"Game—love/ she cries, "go, hide your shame!"
"True words," I answer, sadiy witty;
"With me it's love, with you it's game—
And more's the pity!"

Mashiopable Skirts—Lace Flounces—Ma-terials for Travelling—Shade Hats. Special Correspondence of the Intelligencer.

NEW YORK, May 28 .- The fushionable lady's skirt now drags several inches at the back, unless held up gracefully on one side to show an underskirt or petticoat of colored taffeta silk, with narrow pinked ruffles of the same material, or of black lace. The rise and spread of lace flounces has resembled that of an epidemic, and partly worn dresses either in plain, delicate shades, or silks in flowered patterns, stripes or plain black, all may be rendered stylish by a black lace flounce from twelve to eigh-teen inches in depth, with similar lace teen inches in depth, with similar lace around a short basque, and sometimes sleeves entirely of lace, and a gracoful draping at the neck, forming a flufly vest, if desired. This is not the most economical fashion possible, as coarse lace is never desirable and a fine quality is somewhat expensive; although a fairly good fifteen inch flouncing may be had for $2.10 per yard. There never was a time when one could be so independent of that domestic tyrant, the dressmaker, as at present; the independent skirts brought domestic tyrant, the dressmaker, as at present; the independent skirts brought out some time ago, having proved a great success, and suitable waists can easily be found and adapted to the purpose, by some trifling alternation in the way of trimming. Still, for dress occasions, the long basque is greatly in the ascendency, and elegant evening costumes are of light colored silk, with white lace flounces, used in the manner already described; and often with an intermixture of lace on the hat. Black grenadines and drapery nets are made over changable talleta, silk skirts, and green, red and lavender are favorite colors for this purpose. Flounces or panels of lace are verystylish on grenadines, and the waist is a embroidered crepe de Chine is shown in white, pearl gray and pale blue, with deep borders, embroidered in natural colors, as beautifully shaded as if by the hand of nature herself. Crimson roses look so fresh and natural, that if it were not for the regularity of the distances between them, one might imagine that they had been thrown by accident upon their snowy bed. This exquisite fabric is forty-six inches wide, and varies in price from $5 to $15 a yard, four and a half yards being the quantity usually required for a costume. Printed mousseline-de soje is another fairy fabric for evening wear, and comes in black or white grounds, with floral sprays in brilliant hues on the dark surface, and more delicate ones intersected by white satin hair line stripes on the deep borders, embroidered in natural sprays in brilliant hues on the dark surface, and more delicate ones intersected by white satin hair line stripes on the white grounds. This material will be worn over jupons of changeable silk, harmonizing with the principal color in the floral figures. For graduating dresses, white English Landsdowne is shown, with borders a foot in depth of openwork embroidery, having a narrow border for trimming waist and sleeves. Any fine white material is, however, appropriate for this purpose, and in the well known house of Lord & Taylor, large reductions have been made in all grades of dress goods. English brilliantine is very stylish for traveling dresses, and comes in embroidered front breadths with holen material to match. For comes in embroidered front breadths with plain material to match. For steamer and mountain use, mixed Cheviots in gray or brown, and also diagonal serges are very popular, as they wear well and are fifty-four inches in width. For ulsters, English Gloriosa and Landsdowne are the leading fabrics, because they shed the dust perfectly and are most desirable in every respect.

SHADE HATS for watering places are in chip, fancy rough braids, Leghorn, silk mull, lace and crepe de Chine. As a rule, broad and crepe de Chine. As a rule, broad brims are either turned up at the back or bent in any fanciful way that may suit the style of the wearer; flowers being placed above and below the brim, or massed at the back falling over the crown. The "Gypsy" will be worn by ladies and children as well, and in this style the graceful, undulating brim will retain its natural shape, and full wreaths of small flowers constitute the most stylish trimming. Brocaded ribbon combined with lace and flowers, or a spray of gooseberries with lace and velvet loops, forms a striking garniture. Long strings of colored silk gauze are optional with large hats, and prove a charming addition to some faces. White and colored lilacs, large roses, morning glories, double buttercups and the convolvulus, are all favorites, and accordion-plaited chiffon is a pretty accessory, twisted gracefully among flowers and velvet, or lying plainly on a broad brim. Hats of chiffon in white, pink, blue and crimson are exquisitely light and graceful, having shirred brims, with crowns formed of soft puffs and folds. Lace hats in white or black, are trimmed almost exclusively with flowers, very carelessly arranged, groiding any appearance of stiffness. Very pretty and inexpensive hats are of cotton mull, trimmed with very fine white embroidery, and in the same colors as those in chiffon.

Judge Camden's Will,

Cartishurg Truth.

In the alleged will of G. D. Camden there are some bad breaks that indicate great ignorance. Care is spalled "cair," heretofore is spelled "hertofor" and mixed comes out "mixt." Several letters of Camden are held by contestants in which those words appear, and in every case they are correctly spelled. Several letters written by a person who every case they are correctly spelled. Several letters written by a person who is supposed to have forged the will are also held by the same persons and in those letters the words are written precisely as in the supposed will. There is no punctuation at all in the will, and neither is there in the last named letters, while all of Camden's letters and legal papers are thoroughly and correctly punctuated.
